Vermont Grill Stone

The Vermont Grill Stone is our favorite way to grill a fresh caught trout or a delicate filet of salmon, keeping the fish moist and in one piece. Made of natural basalt rock, its small volcanic pores perfectly distribute heat, making an excellent grilling surface for veggies, seafood, small bites and more. No more falling through the cracks! Just lay it on the grate when you fire up your grill, brush with a little oil and it will heat up quickly and retain its heat. The clean-up is the best part: the Grill Stone naturally cleans itself in the heat of the fire. Simply flip the stone over prior to the next use and let the fire clean your grill stone for you.

Wood is good!

Built to last a lifetime, our beloved wood cutting boards, bowls and utensils can, in many ways, tell the story of our lives. Always at the center of what going on in our kitchens and setting a beautiful stage for our meals, these enduring culinary tools are our trusted culinary companions. With just a little TLC, they will reward us for a lifetime. All you need is a good food-safe mineral oil for regular upkeep, and for that extra-special tune-up and protection, a good buffing with beeswax. Here's how, in 3 easy steps:

Wash & Dry

Always wash a cutting board with warm soapy water, rinse thoroughly, and towel dry. Then let it stand upright, never flat, to dry thoroughly. (Never leave wood soaking or submerged in water, and certainly never in the dishwasher).

Mineral Oil

Wood gets thirsty. You'll notice, when the board begins to dry unevenly or becomes rougher to the touch, that it's time for a quick application of food-safe mineral oil. Frequency will depend on how often you use the board, but as a rule, we suggest once every 2-3 weeks. A couple tablespoons at a time, pour the oil onto the clean, dry board and use a lint-free cloth to rub the oil along the grain of the wood, just enough for an even coating overall. Allow it to absorb, ideally overnight, then wipe off any excess. Doing this will keep your board beautiful for years.

Beeswax

For an extra measure of protection and a rich, brilliant luster, nothing beats an application of beeswax. Beeswax and Mineral Oil work in tandem as the ultimate healthcare regimen for wood. While mineral oil is designed to penetrate and feed the wood, beeswax gives the surface a healthy sheen, an extra measure of water- and stain-resistance and helps to retain the moisture provided by the oil. Apply beeswax about a teaspoon at a time, using a lint-free cloth to rub the wax into the grain of the wood, then finishing with a circular buffing motion to bring out a gorgeous shine.

With this little bit of care and feeding, your beautiful wood boards, bowls and utensils will, like a good friend, get better with age.
